PLASSEY'S LEGACY

The book has been written by eight young Londoners. It is based on their exploration of the London heritage of the East India Company.

The East India Company first traded with the East and then conquered vast areas and ancient civilisations for Britain. It played a very important role in British economic and imperial history for more than 250 years, starting from 1600 when the company was first chartered by Queen Elizabeth I.

The successes and benefits that the Company achieved for Britain also had devastating consequences for India and Bengal in particular.

This book brings some of the shared history to light and hopes to generate wide interest through sharing knowledge about East India Company's London heritage and the city's historical links with Bengal and India.
